37th Annual Edition

$4.00

In '72, I drove this car to Lauderdale for Spring Break.

The girl I caught staring at it married me the next year.

Do you think I'd use just any motor oil?

A '72 Blazer, raised on Gulfpride.[®]

To this day, my wife swears she married me for it. So you could say I have a stake in keeping it running right.

Which is why there was Gulfpride in the crankcase back then. And why it's still there now.

Of course, after 12 years, you can bet this car has had its share of dents and dings. What 4x4 hasn't? But for all the rough road work I've put it through, the engine still purrs like a kitten.

So I'll keep changing the oil every couple of months. And I'll keep right on using Gulfpride.

After all, my wife says she'd leave me if it weren't for this car.

I know she's kidding. But still, I'm not taking any chances.

WHEN IT'S A MATTER OF PRIDE.

Everything we do makes driving better for you.

JOHN FELSKE

PHILLIES
40TH MANAGER

by Larry Shenk

The person

Born May 30, 1942 in Chicago . . . Grew up on city's north side, a Cubs fan ("Hank Sauer was my hero") . . . Baseball and basketball star at Lane Technical High School, a few blocks from Wrigley Field . . . Graduated in 1960 and attended University of Illinois before signing a professional baseball contract . . . 6-foot-4, 225 pounds . . . Batted: right; Threw: right . . . Married Karen Dolan; one daughter, Dawn (19) and one son, Michael (17 in June) . . . Resides in Fox Lake, Ill. ("McHenry is the post office address"), 73 miles north of Chicago.

The player

Twelve years as a professional player . . . Primarily a catcher but also saw limited action at first base and the outfield . . . Appeared in 54 major league games, 14 hits in 104 at bats, a .135 average ("Had trouble with the slider").

The manager

Spent six years in the Milwaukee Brewers system as a manager . . . After two years as a coach with Toronto Blue Jays, he returned to managing in the Phillies organization . . . Named Phillies manager, Sept. 30, 1984, a two-year contract.

The coach

Blue Jays bullpen coach in 1980-81 . . . Dugout coach for Paul Owens with Phillies last season . . . Left Toronto on his own: "I didn't want to be a coach. For me personally, I wanted more of a challenge. Jim Baumer (Phillies VP, Director of Minor Leagues) called me and offered me a job at Reading. I told him he didn't have enough money to get me back to double-A ball. Jim asked me to listen to his thoughts before I definitely said no. I listened, thought it over, called back and accepted. I thought it was the best move I could make at the time for John Felske."

10:15 team meeting

So said a schedule posted on the bulletin board at the Carpenter Field training complex in Clearwater, Florida, where the Phillies were about to begin day one under their new manager John Felske. It was a sunny Sunday morning, March 3, this spring.

Sure, many of the 48 players gathered in the corner of the large clubhouse knew Felske. He was the dugout coach under Paul Owens last season. Prior to that he spent two years in the Phillies minor league system as a manager. Many of the youngsters had played for him either at Reading or Portland.

John Felske minor league manager, John Felske major league coach. That was history. This now was John Felske the major league manager.

Clutching a clipboard in his left hand, he spoke to the players who surrounded number 7.

"I don't believe in a lot of rules but what I have I will enforce.

"I expect you to be on time. The daily schedule will be posted on the two bulletin boards in here and out on field #4. Read them, know where you are supposed to be and be on time. That applies all season long," he said in that deep, bass voice as he walked in small circles to make sure all the players heard him.

"I expect you to give 100 percent all the time when you are on the field. You owe it to the fans who are paying for the tickets. You owe it to the organization. You owe it to your teammates and most important, you owe it to the pitchers.

"I've never known a pitcher who didn't give 100 percent when he was on the mound and I expect you will back him with the same kind of effort.

"The first time one of you guys doesn't, you will be told about it by me. The second time it happens you will come out of the game right away. I don't care who you are. If I tolerate it from one, then I have to accept it from all and that will not happen.

"There is no reason why a player can't hustle all the time. Can anyone tell me why he can't?"

There was about 15 seconds of silence and then he broke the spell: "Okay, let's go to work."

A man who was willing to pay his dues riding the buses of minor league baseball finally realized his dream . . . to manage a major league club.

"I knew when I decided to pursue this job, it would take some years of sacrificing. The only thing is when you're in the minors for a long time, you sometimes start wondering if anyone is noticing and if it's all worthwhile.

"I like the challenge of managing. Someone has to be in charge, make the decisions and I enjoy that. Pressure? It's here but I like it. I also realize that some day I won't be in this position anymore. But I can't worry about that. I can't control that type of thing," he continued.

Felske is a believer in communication—the two-way kind.

"If a player has a problem I want him to come to me. He'll hear my reasoning. He might not like it or agree with it but he will be given an explanation. And, what is said between him and me will be kept between us. I will not chew out a player in the press. The only time I will say something publicly is if a guy doesn't hustle."

He recognizes that as the manager he helps set the personality for the team.

"I've got to be enthusiastic. If the club does not play with enthusiasm then it's my fault. I have to set the tone."

Throughout spring training Felske ran a very well-organized camp. He had his coaches write reports on each player and what needed to be worked on before the season started. Every day was pre-set with a complete schedule leading up to the exhibition games. It was business-like.

That should come as no surprise for during the off-season John Felske is a businessman.

He and another partner own and operate a franchise called The Oil X-change Inc. If your car needs an oil and transmission fluid change and time is of the essence, The Oil X-change is the place to go. The job will be finished in 15 minutes or less.

There are three such garages now. But this past winter, he spent hours making plans for three more in the near future and maybe as many as six more down the road.

A career in baseball and now a time-consuming business career has kept him away from his family quite a bit.

"During the winter, I spend a lot of hours with the business. But I'm home for dinner and spend the evening hours working around the house.

"Baseball has been tough on my family. Karen and the kids used to be with me during the seasons but six or seven years ago they decided they'd like to stay at home.

"Karen's done a great job in raising the kids. She probably knows them better than I do because she's basically raised them. She has her own career as manager of a nursing home. The kids are older now and I don't believe they'll spend much time, if any, in Philadelphia this summer.

"I'm so wrapped up in the season that I can't relax. They know that. They know the game is on my mind so much. I'll be at the park at two o'clock every afternoon and won't leave until around midnight. It's not fair to have them sitting around in an apartment waiting for me. They accept it as the way we live."

Go-go-go, drive-drive-drive, push-push-push . . . does the man ever get a chance to relax?

"Any kind of fishing," he responds with a big smile. "My idea of a great time is sitting in my boat on the lake with a fishing pole in my hand. To me there's nothing greater."

Longevity in Philadelphia Baseball

CARLTON, SCHMIDT NEARING "PHILADELPHIA" RECORD, By Allen Lewis

Long careers in professional sports are comparative rarities. Even in baseball, long careers are the exception, and long careers with the same team are even rarer still.

In more than a century of major league baseball in Philadelphia, over 2,000 different players have been members of the Phillies or the Athletics. Approximately half of those players spent only one season in Philadelphia.

Brooks Robinson of the Baltimore Orioles and Carl Yastrzemski of the Boston Red Sox hold the major league record for most seasons played on one club with 23, and fewer than 15 others have ever played at least two decades with one team in major league history.

In the 102 years that the Phillies have been in existence and the 54 years the Athletics played in Philadelphia before moving to Kansas City after the 1954 season, there have been only 17 players who spent 12 or more full seasons with one of the two teams.

Only one played as many as 14 full seasons here. That was Eddie Plank, the Hall of Fame left-handed pitcher who won 327 games in his career, including 285 with Connie Mack's A's. However, pitcher Steve Carlton will tie that mark and set a new Phillies record this year. The 1985 season will be the 14th for Carlton since the St. Louis Cardinals traded him to the Phillies in February, 1972.

When partial seasons are included, the Philadelphia record-holder is Granny Hamner, the strong-armed shortstop of the 1950 Phillies Whiz Kids. He played in 16 different years with the Phillies, but only 11 were full seasons. He ended his major league career as a pitcher with the Kansas City A's in 1962.

Four other Phillies, in addition to Carlton, played 13 full seasons with the club. The first was lefthanded-throwing catcher Jack Clements, whose career ended before the turn of the century. Hall of Fame pitcher Robin Roberts, the biggest winner in club history until Carlton passed him last season; catcher Red Dooyn, who spent his last five seasons (1910-1914) with the Phillies as the player-manager, and outfielder Cy Williams, the lanky slugger who joined the Phillies in 1918, were the others.

Mike Schmidt, who figures to wind up as the greatest home run-hitting third baseman in baseball history, will join the above quartet at the end of this season. He came up with the Phillies in September, 1972, in time to play in 13 games and hit his first homer.

Carlton and Schmidt, through their longevity and quality performances year-in and year-out, are among the all-time leaders in many categories in baseball.

"Lefty" began this season 11th on the all-time list for most victories (see chart), while Schmidt, the league's premier home run king, ranked 19th in homers (see chart).

There's little doubt when the two hang up their uniforms, they will head directly and quickly to Cooperstown and the Hall of Fame. There's also little doubt that when their playing days are over, no other Phillies player will ever wear number 20 and 32.

Joining Schmidt with 12 full seasons in a Phillies uniform are Ed Delahanty, the Hall of Fame outfielder. Delahanty is the Phils all-time RBI leader, 106 ahead of Schmidt at the start of the 1985 season.

Broadcaster Richie Ashburn, who may someday get into the Hall of Fame, put in an even 12 years as did left-handed pitcher Chris Short and two infielders, second baseman Tony Taylor and shortstop Larry Bowa.

Trailing Plank in seniority with the Athletics are catcher Cy Perkins, infielder Jimmie Dykes and pitcher Ed Rommel, 13 years each, and pitcher Chief Bender and infielder Pete Suder, a dozen each.

Impressive debuts for many Phillies were non-existence.

Roberts made his debut after being recalled from Wilmington and lost to the Pittsburgh Pirates, 2-0, on June 18, 1948. The second run in that game was a homer by Wally Westlake, the first of a record 502 homers Robbie allowed in his 19-year big league career.

Carlton won his first start for the Phillies back on April 15, 1972, opening day in Chicago's Wrigley Field. He went eight innings, gave up four hits, struck out five before being lifted for successful pinch-hitter Ron Stone in the midst of the game-winning, ninth-inning rally.

Taylor went 0-for-3, walked once and stole a base in his first game with Phillies. That happened on the day he was traded, May 13, 1960, by the Cubs to Phillies and suffered a 1-0 loss at Cincinnati.

Short made his debut on April 19, 1959, giving up five runs in less than four innings in a 12-5 loss at Cincinnati in relief of loser Jim Owens.

Schmidt's first game came on Sept. 12, 1972, the Mets at the Vet. Mike had a single in three at bats, a walk and two strikeouts.

Ashburn won the starting job in spring training of 1948 and in the opener on April 10, singled once in five at bats against Johnny Sain in a 3-1 victory over Boston. Few people realize Ashburn, one of the game's greatest center fielders, played left in his first major league game. Starting center fielder Harry Walker was traded later that season and Ashburn moved to center. Following that first game, "Whitey" ran off games of three, two and three hits in his next three games.

Bowa's first game was the 1970 opener at Connie Mack Stadium, a 2-0 victory over the Cubs. Larry was hitless in three at bats with a walk.

Hamner's debut came on Sept. 14, 1944 at Shibe Park. He was just 17 years of age and went in at shortstop for Charlie Letchas late in a 12-1 loss to the New York Giants. He was hitless in his first at bat.

Del Ennis, who put in 11 full seasons with the Phillies, probably has the most unusual debut for a Phillies player. His name was misspelled in the box score.

As a pinch-hitter, Ennis grounded out on April 28, 1946, against the Boston Braves at Fenway Park. He was listed in the Associated Press box score the next day as "Enos".

Philadelphia has produced some great, great baseball players through the years.

Schmidt and Carlton are piling up impressive numbers yearly. When their playing days are over, no one will have represented the City of Philadelphia longer.

Gone But Not Forgotten

Greg Luzinski

Veterans Stadium had opened in April. The year was 1971. That September a bunch of kids were recalled from the Phillies top minor league team in Eugene, Oregon.

One was a big, hulking kid out of Chicago's Notre Dame High School, the Phillies first draft pick three years earlier. He looked like he had made a wrong turn and missed the Eagles lockerroom. Slope-shouldered with huge arms and legs. That was Greg "The Bull" Luzinski.

As he stepped into the batting cage, everything seemed to stand still as he rocketed ball after ball deep into the left field seats including a few into the upper deck.

The Bull proved batting practice was no fluke. His very first home run came on September 7 into section 570 against right-hander Reggie Cleveland of the Cardinals. The ball appeared to land in Cleveland.

Those lean years for Phillies fans began to show promise with the coming of Luzinski, Mike Schmidt, Larry Bowa, Bob Boone and other Phillies products.

Luzinski turned out to be the big stick in the middle of the order during three consecutive division years, 1976-77-78 and a key factor in the 1980 World Champion club.

This February, he, like former teammate Tug McGraw, called it quits.

"I guess what happened to me was I just got burned out mentally. Last year in Chicago I was taking everything home with me. I couldn't sleep and just couldn't relax and forget about the game. It was then that I started thinking about getting out," explained the 34-year-old.

"Baseball is a young man's game. I played 14 years and most of them were quality ones. My years in Philadelphia were the happiest times of my life. I love the area and my family and I are going to stay right here.

"I'm really excited about helping coach a high school baseball team (near his south Jersey home) and not having to worry about those sliders on the black anymore," he laughed in that infectious chuckle of his.

Luzinski will go down in Phillies history as one of the club's greatest sluggers. He finished with 223 homers in a Phillies uniform, good for fourth place on the all-time list. He batted over .300 three consecutive years beginning in 1975.

No one will ever forget his tape measure home runs. He wound up hitting eight in the upper deck in left field. Probably his longest came off a little left-hander with the Atlanta Braves, Jim Freeman. It landed in section 580. The date was July 11, 1973.

Four years and two days later, he faced a former teammate, left-hander Tommy Underwood. All the Bull did in that game was hit two upstairs, sections 570 and 575, a first for one game.

His best year was 1977. He batted .309, hit 39 homers, a record for a Phillies left-fielder, and drove in 130 Runs, a record for a Phillies right-handed hitter. Those are MVP-type numbers. Unfortunately for the Bull, out in Cincinnati George Foster rang up better numbers, .320, 52 homes and 149 RBI.

He and Schmidt combined for 77 homers that season, the best one-two total in Phillies history.

No one will ever forget that bulging body wearing No. 19. That short, quick and powerful stroke. A man who was the quiet leader of the team. A man who showed the same emotions, home run or strikeout.

No one will forget his game-winning homer in the first League Championship Series victory over Houston in 1980 and his clutch pinch double in game five.

While it is no longer there, no one will forget his titanic home run to dead center field at the Vet. At one time, a Liberty Bell was mounted on the facade of the fourth level. Burt Hooton was pitching for the Cubs and Luzinski lit up the Bell with a Bullshot on May 16, 1972.

The Bull and his 11-year-old-son, Ryan, who bears an incredible resemblance to his dad, hope to visit the Vet often this season.

It's hard to put into words what he meant to Philadelphia back in the 70s when the Phillies developed pride. Much of it centered around Luzinski. A little part of all of us left that tearful day in Clearwater (spring 1981) when he was traded to the Chicago White Sox.

If you happen to see a big guy walking around the Vet this summer who looks familiar, be sure to thank him for all the thrills. The Bull is gone but not forgotten and we all owe him a tip of the cap.

Tug McGraw

There comes the time when every baseball player has to face the end of his career. It's probably the toughest thing an athlete has to do . . . take off that uniform.

For Frank Edwin (Tug) McGraw that end came this February and he faced it and accepted it with class. If you know Tug, that was no surprise.

He spent 17 years and 138 days wearing a major league baseball uniform. The first one was the New York Mets. The last 10 years were spent in Philadelphia wearing the Phillies pin-stripes.

His retirement announcement came 7,553 days after he signed a minor league contract with the Mets for a $7,000 bonus and a $400 per-month contract. Tug left the game wealthier but he gave back more than he took.

Tug will go in the history books as one of the greatest relief pitchers. He finished with 1,302.2 relief innings, a National League record. His 179 saves ranked him sixth at retirement. He holds the Phillies (95) and Mets (84) records for the most saves in the history of both ball clubs.

He was in 824 games, won 96, lost 92 with a 3.14 ERA.

In all, he pitched 1,997 professional innings. The average number of pitches per inning is 15. Using that figure, Tug threw an estimated 29,955 professional pitches.

But numbers is not how Tug McGraw will be remembered.

He was colorful, enthusiastic, energetic, charismatic . . . sort of a 12-year-old boy every day of his life.

Mets fans will always remember him for his "You Gotta Believe" attitude which led them from losers to winners.

Paul Owens, Phillies General Manager believing he needed an experienced arm in the bullpen to help a young team he was building get over the hump, acquired McGraw plus two outfielders (Don Hahn and Dave Schneck) from the Mets, Dec. 3, 1974, for Del Unser, John Stearns and MacScarce.

Consecutive division titles in 1976-77-78 but no World Series appearance created a lot of frustration for Phillies fans. Then came 1980 and as he had done with the Mets in 1969 and 1973, McGraw was right in the middle.

Coming off the disabled list on July 17 of that season, he proceeded to turn in one of the greatest performances ever for a bullpener. His ERA after July 17 was 0.52 for 52.1 innings. Of the Phillies final 18 wins, he saved three and won five. He was on the mound for the division clincher in Montreal. His leap after the final out was thought to be perhaps the greatest in Phillies history. It was short-lived.

Appearing in all five games of the gut-wrenching League Championship Series with Houston, Tug saved games 1 and 4.

In the World Series against Kansas City, he was in four of the six games, two saves and a win. He struck out José Cardenal for the final out to win the pivotal fifth game.

Then, came the greatest moment in Phillies history, all 97 years of it. Precisely at 11:29 p.m., Tuesday, Oct. 21, 1980, Tug McGraw fanned Willie Wilson to give the Phillies and their long-suffering fans their first World Championship.

He turned, both arms raised skywards and awaited the leaping Mike Schmidt. The celebration, the city's greatest, was on.

No one will ever forget that moment.

No one will ever forget him strutting in from the bullpen with organist Paul Richardson playing the Irish jig. No one will ever forget the slapping of his glove against his thigh as he left the mound. No one will ever forget the pounding of his left hand over his heart after a crucial out.

When he announced his retirement, he didn't announce any definite plans.

"I've had offers off the field and one on the field. My family and I decided one thing, we want to stay in Philadelphia.

"I'll never forget my years here. Obviously, being part of the first championship club will always be something special. I don't know how to describe the feeling after I struck out Wilson. I know I was out of gas and I don't know if I could have thrown another pitch.

"The parade was awesome. I won't forget it and I won't forget the headache I had following our celebration."

He was an original, a one-of-a-kind showman who was at once an author, humorist, statesman, philosopher, actor and ballplayer.

He's gone from the playing field but his memory will live forever. And that's good.

Stealing a Page from the Record Book

By Vince Naus

Perhaps the most important change to hit the baseball diamond over the past two decades has been the re-emergence of the stolen base.

Consider the fact that in 1910, sixteen major league teams stole a total of 3,265 bases. By 1950 the total dropped to 650 and didn't reach 3,000 again until 1976 despite the addition of eight clubs to the major league ranks.

It is important to note that the decline of the stolen base coincided with the lively ball era which began in 1920. Prior to the introduction of Babe Ruth and the like, teams did not have the luxury of turning a game around with one swing of the bat. Therefore, the stolen base was a big offensive weapon, especially in games where one run could make the difference. The home run seemed to change this.

A good measure of a successful base stealer is 50 in a season. Fifty steals is comparable to 20 wins for a pitcher or 30 home runs for a slugger. In sixty-five years from 1900 to 1964 players stole 50 or more bases 67 times. Over the past 20 years it has been done 89 times. Luis Aparicio ended a long drought when, in 1959, he became the first player in 14 years to steal 50 bases.

Aparicio and Maury Wills re-introduced the stolen base as a key part of the game in the early sixties. Lou Brock and Bert Campaneris followed them in the late sixties, then came Joe Morgan and Cesar Cedeno in the seventies and now in the eighties an explosion of speed is being led by Rickey Henderson and Tim Lincecum.

It took 47 years for Ty Cobb's record of 96 stolen bases in a season, set in 1915, to fall. Wills swiped 104 bases in 1962 to surpass Cobb, but just twelve years later Lou Brock erased Wills' mark with 118 thefts. A short eight years later, in 1982, Rickey Henderson eliminated Brock's name from the record books with 130 stolen bases.

It took Brock 19 seasons to amass 938 stolen bases, breaking Cobb's 51-year-old career record of 892, accumulated over 24 seasons. Meanwhile, in only six seasons Henderson has already compiled 493 steals and Tim Lincecum has 321 in just four full seasons.

In 1908 the Phillies established their club record with 200 stolen bases. Left fielder Sherry Magee led the way with 40, followed by first baseman Kitty Bransfield. Otto Knabe (2b), Eddie Grant (3b) and John Titus (RF) each pilfered 27 bases and catcher Red Dooen added 20.

Two years after the Phils record-setting 200 steals they managed 199 thefts. Seventy-four years later, in 1984, a trio named Juan Samuel, Von Hayes and Jeff Stone led the club to its third highest total ever with 186.

Jeff Stone contributed "only" 27 steals to the cause, but that wasn't his fault. He played in just 51 games, having

TOP BASE STEALING TEAMMATES

Last season Juan Samuel, Von Hayes and Jeff Stone combined for 147 stolen bases. The total was the seventeenth best in major league history. On the surface that may not seem too impressive, but considering Stone played in only 51 games last year (less than one third of the season) it is a very impressive number.

Assuming the trio stays healthy, 200 steals would not be out of the question for the "roadrunners". Anything over 195 would be a record-setting number. Below are the top 10 base stealing trios of all-time.

spent more than half the season in the minor leagues and missing another month because of an injury.

It is hard to imagine how many bases the Phillies will steal in 1985 with Stone playing every day. It's safe to say, however, that the club stolen base mark will fall easily this year.

Juan Samuel broke into the major leagues last year with a bang, stealing 72 bases to set a major league rookie record and a Phillies club mark. It may have looked easy, but it sure wasn't.

The swift Samuel is quick to point out that speed isn't everything in stealing bases. "It's always going to be a close play. The important thing is to get a good lead because it doesn't matter how fast you are, if you don't get a good lead you're not going to steal the base," he said.

Sammy normally takes a three to three and one-half step lead, depending on the pitcher, and sometimes the catcher. But pitchers don't make it easy, they try to keep the baserunners guessing by speeding up their delivery, changing their motion and by throwing over to first base.

"Pitchers don't always give you the same move all the time," said Samuel. "Sometimes they have a high leg kick and other times it will be a short kick. I try to make the pitcher come (throw) to first base a few times and show me his moves, then I can see which is his best (move)," he added.

The runner seems to have the upper hand though. After all, with a speedster like Samuel on first base the pitcher now has a distraction and cannot focus his full attention on the batter.

According to Samuel, the count to the batter plays a key role in determining when you steal a base. "I steal a lot on the first pitch, but when pitchers start seeing this they pitch-out. You have to work the count when stealing a base. A good time to steal is when the count is 2-and-0 because there is no chance of a pitchout and the batter should get a good pitch to hit."

Some people, including Samuel, say third base is easier to steal than second. Why? Because the runner is able to watch the catcher; the pitcher doesn't keep you as close to second base as he does at first; and the third baseman is usually playing back and can't always get to the bag in time to take the throw.

Sliding into the bag is the hazardous part of base stealing because every time the runner slides he risks injury. Samuel took that risk 87 times last season and jammed his fingers a few times sliding head first. He slides feet first if he gets a good jump but when he doesn't, he goes head first on the outside of the bag to avoid the tag.

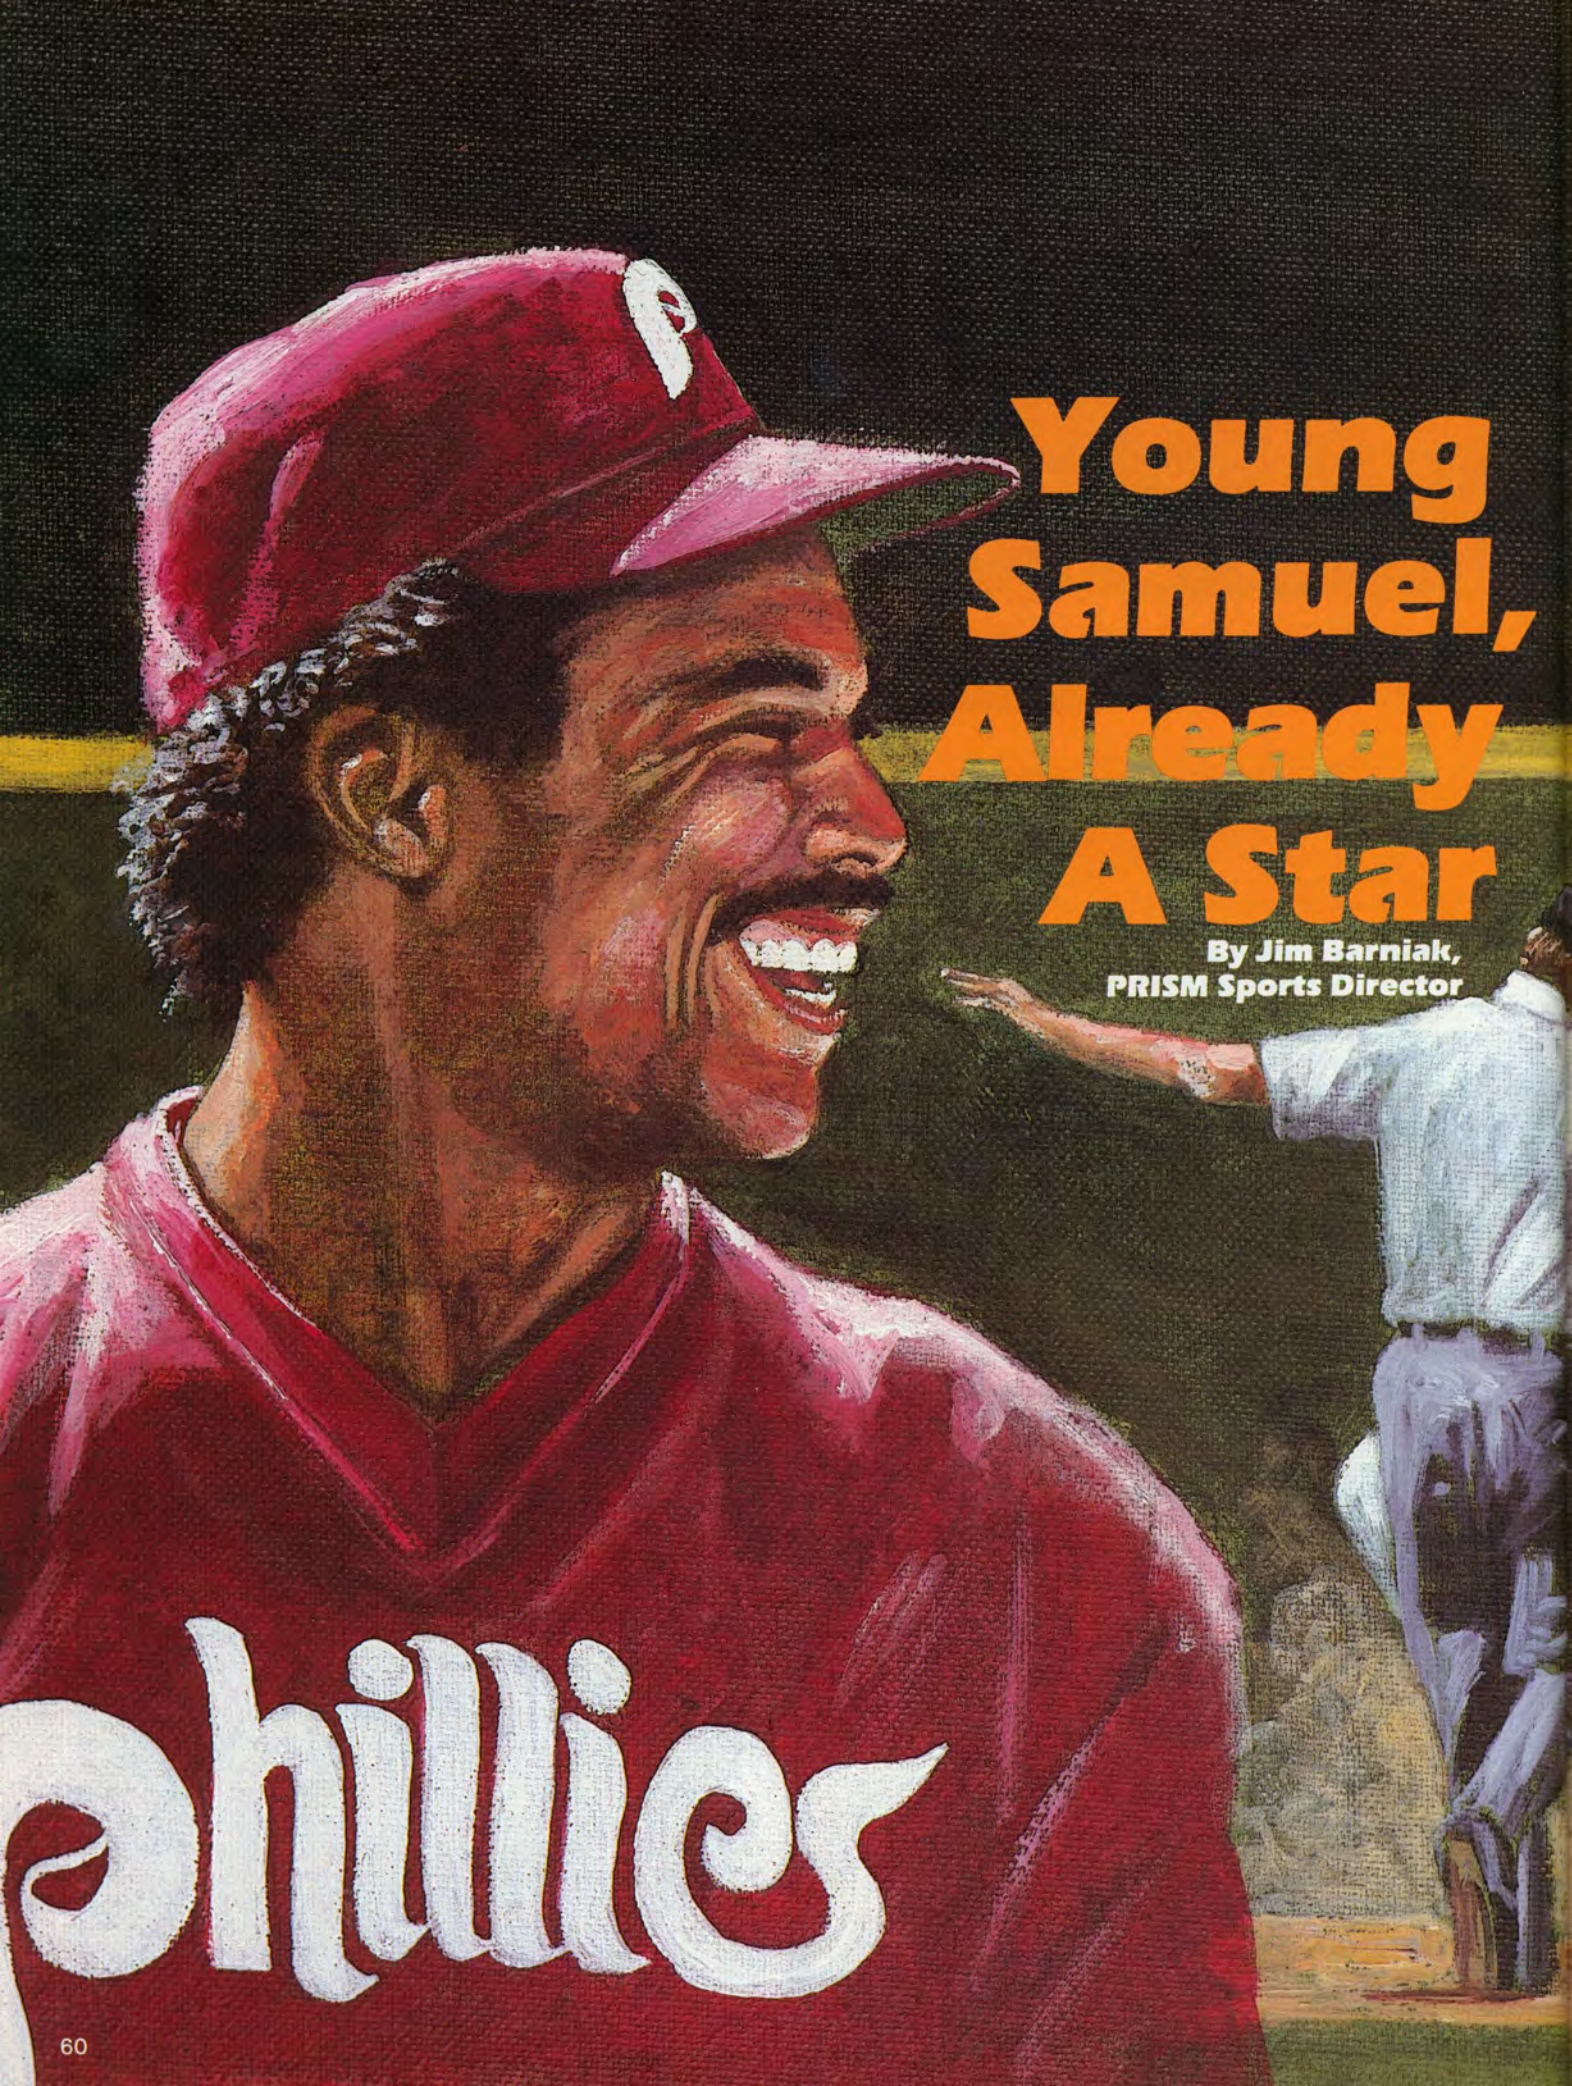

Von Hayes made a name for himself last season as a base stealing threat in addition to being an offensive threat. He attributed his excellent year at the plate to the stolen base. Yes, the stolen base.

Von says with the pitcher trying to keep the runner close to the bag it gave him an advantage as a hitter. "I got more fast balls to hit," he explained.

"If a team pitches out with Sammy or Stoney on base the pitcher gets behind in the count. And when I'm up 2-and-0 or 3-and-1 it creates another advantage because he has to give me a good pitch to hit," said Hayes. "Also, it creates a hole between first base (where the first baseman is holding the runner on) and second base (where the second baseman is moving toward the bag to take the throw from the catcher). And that's a good reason why I batted .292 last year, because I got a lot of fast balls to hit in those situations and hit them in the hole," he continued.

When Von spends time studying a pitcher before a game he doesn't just look to see how well he is throwing, he also checks his delivery to see how quick he throws to the plate and to first base. "Once I've seen a pitcher's move I know if I can steal off him or if he will give me a hard time," said Hayes. But with Mike Schmidt swinging the bat behind him, Von feels comfortable to run at will.

And run, run, run will be the Phillies style in 1985. Manager John Felske has said Samuel and Stone will have the green light at all times and that Hayes will also be on his own except in certain situations. Look for plenty of steals, double steals and maybe even triple steals during the 1985 season as the fleet-footed Phillies steal a page from the record book.

San Pedro de Macoris—A Place Where Baseball Is THE Game

Had Ernest Hemingway been a baseball nut, he most assuredly would have found his way to the Dominican Republic, and then on to the seaside industrial town of San Pedro de Macoris and then, finally, to Tio Miguel, a typically marvelous tropical saloon whose sidewalk tables stand barely the length of a bloop single away from the crashing caribbean.

To the rear of the CAFE looms a satellite receiving dish, whose imposing size might startle a stranger into thinking that there are folks around plotting to shoot down guided missiles. Actually, the natives are more concerned with shooting down baseball games, this under the direction of Luis Victoria Nin, the proprietor.

"Chico", as he is called, grew up in South Philadelphia, craves cheese steaks, always wanted to be a Mummer, but now has returned to his native Dominican Republic where he operates a saloon while studying to be a doctor.

Mostly, though, he is crazy about baseball. Ah, what stuff for novels.

"Picture this," Chico begins in perfect English, "Samuel is the hitter and Andujar is the pitcher. First pitch ... 'STRIKE ONE' ... and one whole side of the bar is cheering. Then, next pitch, boom, a double to left-center and then the other side of the room is crazy. It goes on and on like that for a whole ball game. That's why I had to put in the big screen. The little TV's, they would always fall off the platform and break from all the noise and the excitement."

To say that baseball is not taken seriously in the Dominican Republic is to say that sugar cane won't make it as a cash crop. In fact, aspiring baseball players grow on the island at about the same rate as the stalks of cane, or so they say. Actually, there may be more ballplayers.

Baseball is everywhere. It draws turnaway crowds in bars where satellite dishes gobble up whatever American telecasters toss to the heavens. In the winter months, six teams pack them in all across the island in the Dominican Professional League. On every street corner, it seems, on every day of the week, kids play the game, mostly with a rubber ball and a cane stalk as the only pieces of equipment.

Why? Because on this Caribbean island of roughly seven million people, baseball is seen by most as the most practical way to bust out of the immense poverty that grips the land like a spreading fungus. Take the case of Juan Samuel, for example. Before it was discovered that he possessed big league baseball ability, he earned 50 pesos (roughly $17) per week tossing bales of cotton around in a blue jeans factory. Now, with a swing of the bat or a swipe of a base, he commands thousands upon thousands of dollars and his stock is barely off the launching pad.

One needs only to see Jaquin Andujar roar down the highway in his bright, red Triumph convertible, with Samuel and Rafael Ramirez close behind in their matching roadsters, to get inspired. Thus, there are kids all over the place, running out base hits and dreaming of trading in their machetes for gold chains.

There are over 100 Dominican natives playing professional baseball in the United States. About one-third of them have made it to the major leagues. Remarkable numbers when you consider that the country is only roughly the size of Vermont and New Hampshire combined.

In the town of San Pedro de Macoris, alone, there is Samuel, the Cardinals' Andujar, Ramirez of the Braves, Pedro Guerrero of the Dodgers, Tony Peña of the Pirates, Mario Soto of the Reds, Damaso Garcia of the Blue Jays, Alfredo Griffin of the A's and Carmelo Castillo and Julio Franco of the Indians. To name just a few. There are at least a dozen others dangling on the Triple-A vine just ready to ripen.

Baseball has been THE game on the island for as long as anyone can remember . . . Columbus has been rumored to have umpired a game between the Nina and the Pinta crews while celebrating the discovery of the New World.

There are stories that chronicle the exploits of many great Dominican Republic players, but it was not until the emergence of the Alou Brothers—Felipe, Matty and Jesus—in the mid-50's that news traveled beyond the tropics.

"Once the racial barriers came down in the major leagues, we became desirables," recalls Felipe Alou, now a manager in the Dominican Winter League.

"The talent has always been here. And, now, because of what is happening here with so many kids so eager to play, the raw talent is becoming awesome. It needs only to be developed with proper teaching and much hard work."

The Alous paved the way for Juan Marichal, the Dominican Republic's only Hall of Famer, and for Manny Mota, Ozzie Virgil Sr., Rico Carty, Julian Javier, Cesar Cedeño . . . the names could fill out a dozen lineup cards.

The big name now, or make that the hottest new name these days, is Juan Samuel. Not only because he took the big leagues by storm in his rookie season with the Phillies. But, . . . well, let his closest watchers tell us.

"Because," says Felipe Alou, who managed Samuel during the winter months for the Escogido ballclub, "he plays all out. He takes the extra base, he makes the head first slide. He does that down here in the winter in front of the local fans. He does not come here to take it easy, which many Dominican players do after they play all summer in the States. The fans, they are very knowledgeable. Soon, he will be the most popular player in the country, if he is not already."

According to Chico, Samuel is clearly the most popular player according to the Richter ratings during baseball nights at the Tio Miguel.

"Sammy is a big star who carries himself like one of the ordinary people," says Chico. "That counts for everything around here.

"Of course, he is an inspiration to all the young people in the streets. But, he also is an inspiration to all the people who are too old now to make it out. To them, Sammy is a symbol of something good. I don't want to make him out as a National hero already, but, you know, I'm beginning to think he is."

If he has reached such lofty status in his homeland, Samuel doesn't flaunt it. Oh, there is the bright, yellow TR-7 and some flashy clothes—trinkets to keep up with the Andujars, you understand—but, basically Samuel appears more concerned with caring for his family.

Sammy's father died when he was 15. He has helped his mother raise the six other Samuel children, three of whom still live at home. Home is a well-kept stucco bungalow on a narrow dirt path otherwise strewn with goats, mules and bare-chested-baseball-playing youths.

During the winter baseball season, Samuel rents an apartment 50 miles away in the capital city of Santo Domingo, which is home base for the Escogido ballclub. More often than not, however, he prefers to stay at home in San Pedro and endure a not-always-easy, two-lane highway commute.

"In San Pedro, I am much more comfortable," he says. "Sometimes, I feel a little bad because I am so very fortunate and so many people here aren't. But, in San Pedro, there is no resentment. Rather, they express so much pride. The people make you feel good. In some of the other cities, I wouldn't feel so safe."

Sammy is not above returning the favor. Frequently, he will drive to the outskirts of San Pedro to a huge industrial park nestled between the town's university and the vast expanses of sugar cane fields.

There, in the remotest region of the park, is a softball field where Samuel's baseball talents were first unveiled. A few yards away is the factory where Samuel worked. It did not hurt that his brother, Carlos was a foreman there and it was Carlos who carefully juggled Juan's work schedule so that he would have the opportunities to perform before the major league scouts. Sammy gets a kick out of visiting his old, factory buddies and recalling the good ol' days, if you will.

"Without baseball, this is where I would be today," he says. "I would be here a long time, just like Carlos. So, I like to come back here. It reminds me how lucky I am. And I like to spend a little time with the other guys."

On a drive through the streets of San Pedro, Samuel was told by a visitor that the baseball fans of Philadelphia were getting pretty excited about him as a ballplayer as well and that soon he could be idolized by even greater hordes of baseball fanatics.

"You mean the boo birds," he said. "Ah, I like the Philadelphia fans. They are so knowledgeable, just like the fans here. But, here, believe me, it is tougher to please. Tougher than Philadelphia.

COMMUNITY RELATIONS

In only its second full year of operation, the Phillies Community Relations Department developed many new programs which reached out to countless charities and organizations in the Tri-State Area.

When the books were closed, the Phillies had raised over $100,000 for charities over the course of the year. Some of the new programs and several popular holdovers were:

Phillies Wives

The Phillies Wives adopted ALS (Lou Gehrig's Disease) as their charity. Through a season-long fund-raising effort, which included prize drawings and a Fashion Show-Dinner, $30,000 was raised for the ALS Diagnostic and Treatment Clinic at Hahnemann University Hospital.

Cheer Up Kids

Local hospitals received "Get Well" cards and a supply of yearbooks to distribute to each child when they were admitted. The cards feature the Phillie Phanatic and signatures of the players.

Usherettes

The Phillies Usherettes doubled their efforts over the 1983 season by raising $2,000 for Children's Hospital in Philadelphia. The softball team played nearly 20 charity games during the summer.

Adopt-A-School

The Phillies adopted the Abraham S. Jenks School in South Philadelphia as part of the School District's Adopt-A-School Program.

Ashburn Golf Tournament

Richie again hosted this celebrity outing to benefit handicapped Boy Scouts and Explorers in Philadelphia. Nearly $30,000 was donated to scouting from the tournament which featured Garry Maddox, Mike Schmidt, Von Hayes, Kevin Gross, Larry Christenson, Bill Campbell, Claude Osteen and Dave Bristol, to name a few.

Gaudenzia House

During the winter, 10 Phillies players hosted a night at Pulsations Night Club to raise money for the Gaudenzia House, a drug and alcohol rehabilitation center.

Ethiopia

Von Hayes, Jeff Stone, Garry Maddox and Tug

McGraw attended a benefit in January to raise money for the hungry in Ethiopia.

Maddox Cares

Garry Maddox held his eighth annual Celebrity Bowling Tournament in January and also hosted a Tennis Tournament in October for the benefit of the Philadelphia Child Guidance Clinic. Through his efforts over the years, a total of $564,000 has been raised for the Clinic.

Schmidt's MVPs

Mike Schmidt continued his "Mike's Valuable People" program by making 20 tickets available for each home game to under-privileged children.

65-Roses

Charles Hudson served as spokesman for "65 Roses" again last season, helping raise money for Cystic Fibrosis.

Spreading Cheer

Eight Phillies players participated in a Christmas Party for children sponsored by the No Greater Love Association.

School Visits

Over 40 schools enjoyed presentations from various members of the Community Relations team including Maje McDonnell, Hank King, John Fierro and Chris Wheeler.

Visit the Vet

Visit the Vet offered school children an opportunity to tour Veterans Stadium during the off-season months. Thirty-five groups visited the Phillies clubhouse, weight room, press box, field and underground batting cage.

Caravan

The annual Press Caravan raised $12,000 for charities in Wilkes Barre, Allentown, Harrisburg, Lancaster and Hamilton Township, NJ.

Film Library

Five new films were added to the Phillies extensive film library which are available to local groups at no charge.

Dream Week

Dream Week delighted nearly 125 participants in February at the Phillies training site in Clearwater, Florida. Reservations have already opened for next year's Dream week, February 9-16, 1986.

Speaking up

Players, broadcasters and front office personnel spoke to numerous organizations in the Delaware Valley throughout the year. Former Phillies coach, Maje McDonnell alone made 80 appearances last year. Players who were most active in the Community Relations Department include Larry Andersen, Greg Gross and Jeff Stone.

Mike Schmidt donated 400 baseball gloves to the Police Athletic League after the slugger hit his 400th career home run early in the 1984 season.

Garry and Sondra Maddox were just two of the many Phillies and their wives who participated in the Fashion Show for the benefit of ALS.

Pros And Pals

by Chris Wheeler

After dinner speaking appearances are a way of life for some of us lucky enough to make our living working in the wonderful world of professional baseball, and the questions fans ask vary depending on the success of the club.

However one question remains constant year after year be it a Rotary Club in Willingboro or a Kiwanis Club in Wilkes-Barre. Do you four guys really like each other as much as it sounds?

The "four guys" are Harry Kalas, Richie Ashburn, Andy Musser and myself, the four people on the face of the earth lucky enough to comprise the Phillies broadcast team. And the answer to the question is an unequivocal YES!

Our Radio-TV team comprises four very different people with strong opinions drawn together by a love of a very simple game played with a ball and bat.

We spend almost seven months thrown together on a series of seemingly endless road trips, hotel rooms, rain delays and airplane rides. We become family in the sense that we are each other's advisors, confidantes, sounding boards and best of friends.

Harry Kalas is the best baseball announcer in the world. Voice, knowledge, anticipation, sense of humor, you name it and Harry was at the head of the line when these qualities were handed out. I marvel day after day at his incredible consistency in calling a game. And not just those games that are exciting. Harry is right there on every pitch as much in a 15-0 rout as describing a game-winning home run in his inimitable style, "It's got a chance, outta here, home run Michael Jack Schmidt, Phillies win it!" Kinda gives me goose bumps just thinking about it.

Richie Ashburn is a true character and the man is just the same off the air as he is in front of a microphone. My boyhood idol as a kid growing up in

RICHIE ASHBURN

Philadelphia might be one of the five most popular people in the area. For the last 20 years, Phillies baseball and Richie Ashburn have been synonymous and well they should because Whitey truly loves our ballclub and the game of baseball. Oh once in a while he'll go off on a little tirade about "what's this game coming to" but his mid-West sense of humor quickly returns and that little chuckle of a laugh lets every fan know that everything will be O.K.

Andy Musser is the consummate professional. Always prepared may be the scouts motto but it fits my friend of some 18 years perfectly. Unlike Harry and Whitey, Andy did not have a lot of baseball background when he took the mike for the Phillies back in 1976.

ANDY MUSSER

He had to learn the game and through a lot of hard work has become a real fine play-by-play man. Musser is the rock of the crew, the guy who shows up every day with his emotions under control whether the club has won ten straight or lost ten straight.

As for myself, I have to be the most fortunate person imaginable. I mean here's a kid growing up in Newtown Square, PA, as a baseball rat and hiding a radio under the covers and listening to By Saam and Bill Campbell and Gene Kelly describe the exploits of Richie Ashburn and so many others. And now here I am working with three of the top people in the business and getting paid for it at the same time. Talk about a dream come true.

We care about each other and never let problems fester. Oh it might mean Whitey storming out of one of our very entertaining dinners because of a disagreement with Harry, or Andy telling me I was a little tough on a certain umpire, or Harry calling a guy out on strikes on a slider and Whitey saying it was a fastball. But in a business filled with tremendous egos, everyone in the Phillies broadcast booth knows his role and accepts the privilege of bringing Phillies baseball to the most rabid and knowledgeable fans in the country.

Thanks for watching and listening. The cakes and brownies are great and an indication that we are coming across as your friend. And the way you treat us in public makes us feel as if we must be doing something right.

We'll try real hard to give you Phillies fans the most accurate and entertaining broadcast possible because that's what you deserve. And we hope you keep bringing us into your living rooms, dining rooms, kitchens and automobiles for a long time to come. We love our jobs and sure as heck never want to really have to go to work for a living!

LUNCH OF CHAMPIONS

Just about anyone can tell you what champions have for breakfast.

Ever wonder what they have for lunch?

We'd like to make a suggestion: Campbell's® Soup—the official soup of the 1984 Winter Olympics.

One serving of Campbell's hearty Vegetable Beef Soup, for instance, contains more than a third of the day's requirement of vitamin A.

And it's easy to digest. Which makes it easier for you to stay on your toes.

But above all, you can't beat Campbell's Soup for taste.

After a hard workout on the court or the field—in the gym or on the slopes—sitting down to delicious, hot Campbell's Soup is a kind of reward in itself.

So whether you're out to break records—or breakdance—share the table at lunchtime with another champion.

A super bowl of Campbell's Soup.
